GEORGE PARR.—This celebrated cricketer is a native of the county of Nottingham, and was born at Ratcliffe, on the 22nd of May, 1826. Of all our professionals, none have proved stronger with the bat than the subject of our notice. Indeed it is generally admitted that he has been the greatest batsman in England, being a wonderfully fine leg-batter with a good defence, and when in his prime was scarcely ever known to miss a ball pitched to the leg. He tries slow bowling at times, and is often very successful when the more scientific bowlers have failed to obtain wickets. In the match Kent v England, at Lord's, he played a splendid innings of 39 against Willsher's fine bowling, with two extras in the field, and has ever been regarded as one of the favourites of the cricket public. On the death of Clarke, he succeeded as secretary to the All-England Eleven, and in 1853 he undertook the captaincy of the team sent out to Australia. We would not wish to contrast his "doings" now with those of a former period, for Parr must bow, like other heroes, to the rising talents; but he may well feel proud that he has been England's finest batsman, and as in a few more years it is probable he will retire from the active exertions of the "tented field," it is much to know that in his retirement he will be universally respected, and that no man will attempt to obscure a name which in cricket circles is one of the brightest. Of his fame, his name, and his honours, we can only echo the words of the poet—

"He won them well, and may he wear them long."

Our selected pugilistic delineations for the current week are Tom Cribb and Curran—the former the Champion of England and the latter the Champion of Australia—of course, we have the right, as well as the pleasure, first to pay homage to the memory of the dead fistie warrior who rests in all peace in Wolverich Church-yard in West of the living champion defence. Cribb was born at Hanham, Gloucestershire, July 8, 1781, weight 14st 5lb, and made his maiden essay in the ring in 1805, with Maddox, whom he defeated in such clever style that surely indicated his after career of unexampled pugilistic glory. He became champion and received a belt (not transferable and cup) for his next beat Tom Blake, 40cs, Blackheath, and on the 21st of the following May served out Ikeey Figg a severe 11 rounds, Blackheath. By accident, he was beaten by George Nicholls, but although his star waned for the time being, it was "resurgam," with regard to his manifest indomitable fighting powers, and the wondrous display of muscular agency and manipulation in those, the palmy days of the ring, drew forth instinctively the deserved admiration of both the patrician and plebeian supporters of the P.K. Success smiled upon all his other engagements, even against the acknowledged best men of the day. Richmond, the Black, in Sussex; Jem Belcher, at Moulsey Hurst; Horton, in Herts; Jem Belcher (second battle), on Epsom Downs; Molneux, another iron hearted dackie (in two separate encounters); and Carter, all fell before his victorious arm. The man of might then rested upon his couch of glory at the commencement of the year 1829; and died at a green old age on May 11, 1848, in High-street, Woolwich.

Tom CURRAN, the Champion of Victoria, (and whose likeness we take from an admirable and specially-ordered portrait by Mr. George Newbold, the well-known sporting publisher), stands 5ft 9 1/2 in, weighs 11st, and was born at Jersey, September 10, 1837. He beat Peake, 1845, 79 rounds, 24, 40m, 45 a side. Beat James the Navvie, 1848, 20 rounds, 30m, 45 a side. Received forfeit of £5 from George Hughes, 1849. Beat Jem Guy, 1849. Received £25 forfeit from Tora Bailey, of Bristol, 1851, the latter not appearing in the ring. Beat O'Reilly at Forest Creek, Victoria, 1853, 20 rounds, 30m, £30 a side. Beat Jack Taylor, of Castlemaine, 1854, 18 rounds, 28m, £25 a side. Fought Bob Cole at McCullum's Creek, 1854, 7 rounds, 8m, ring broken in, stakes £200 a side, ultimately drawn. Received £5 forfeit from Dick Hunt, Champion of New South Wales, 1859. Beat Harry Sallars, of the Werribee Plains, near Geelong, 25 rounds, 2h, 45m, £600 and the Championship. Presented with a magnificent gold belt, March 12, 1860.

Fille de l'Air (late Capucine 2nd) is a chesnut filly by Faugh-a-Ballagh out of Pauline, by Volcano, and was bred in France. As a two year old won easily the Woodcote Stakes, at Epsom Summer Meeting, carrying 8st 7lb, with Watkins up, and beating a field of fourteen, ran third for the South Western Handicap, at Goodwood she pulled off easily, by a couple of lengths, the Melcomb Stakes, carrying 8st 12lb (including 6lb extra), and beating Scottish Chief (9st 11lb, including 6lb extra) and seven others. At Brighton she walked over for the Twelfth Brighton Biennial Stakes. At Doncaster she ran second, carrying 8st 8lb, to Ely (8st 10lb) for the Champagne Stakes, Ely (Continued on Page 164.)

SNIPPE INN, ANDENSHAW.—On Saturday last about 200 persons visited these grounds to witness the final heats of a dog handicap for £5 15s.—money prizes given by Mrs. H. Warren, the proprietress, when the following ran their heats in the first ties:—Greave's Lizzy, 15lb, 21 yds; Clough's Lady, 16lb, 27 yds; Schofield's Violet, 18lb, 18 yds; Smith's Empress, 18lb, 23 yds; Matley's Swallow, 17lb, 14 yds.

Calliper measurements dispensed with. Phreno-physiometrical measurements:—Animal, 5; moral, 2; intellectual, 1; selfish, 4; social, 1; intellectual angle, 60; angle of destructiveness or facial, 34, or $\frac{1}{2}$ degree less than that of so many of Molloy's distinguished countrymen who have made a lofty and speedy exit from this sinful world, doubtless to a better one. Temperament indeterminate. Ears very large (according to Molloy, "assinine," but to Lavater something else). Eyes grey, and being deeply set under a low and protruding frontal bone, denote great cunning and ferocity. Hair red, and very "shaggy." Tolerable symmetry between the cephalic, thoracic, and abdominal regions. Without particularising the exact relative size of each of the forty organs it may be enough to say that it will at once be perceived that destructiveness is the most active of the entire; and unhappily this very dangerous organ readily and powerfully becomes excited, when an unerring olfactory has detected the loathsome presence of eggs and rotten old Popery. I may lastly state that the hands and feet are moderately small, and decently white, having been habituated from infancy to the liberal use of soap and water, and those unnecessary incumbrances of civilisation—the glove and boot and shoe. Trusting to hear soon again from Mr. Molloy, I remain, dear sir, yours most sincerely,

R. D. H.

(To the Editor of "The Illustrated Sporting News.")
 Sir,—Having with great interest read the controversy in your valuable paper concerning the belt and title of the championship, and expecting to see it brought to a conclusion (which I think it is high time it was), but I see much the reverse of that in your last. I should think it is plain to every one who ought to have the belt and title, if anybody does, as King defeated Mace, and won it. I hear Mace challenged King and he declined to fight him. If any man has the belt and title before the next fight, I say Mace ought, and may that satisfactorily prove who has a right to them both. Perhaps your correspondent, "Alexander Brown," will inform your readers who does hold first place, and he says he is sure Mace does not, and I think Mace's last fight has proved him as clever and game a man as ever entered ever he will. If another correspondent signing himself "Pat Molloy," would take the trouble to very carefully phonogloss his own head, and be so kind as to furnish your readers with the results, I have no doubt we should have an improved method of discovering when we have with an interesting and valuable acquisition to zoology in the shape of a cross between a thorough-bred ass and an idiot, as I, cum multis aliis, am sure he must be, or he would never allow such senseless epithets to issue from his pen, Ad uno diem omne,—viz., his ignorant reference to the feminine sex. Concerning "R. D. H.," whom I, a fortiori, believe to be compos mentis. Hoping, sir, you will excuse me for trespassing so far upon your valuable space.—I am, yours truly,

DEUS ET TUTAMEN.

(To the Editor of "The Illustrated Sporting News.")
 Sir,—Allow me through the medium of your valuable paper to offer a few remarks concerning the man "R. D. H." and his opponents. I would recommend "R. D. H." to abstain in future from making a greater fool of himself than he has done already. If he still persists in doing so I think that the best thing to prevent this pest of society from annoying the readers of your paper in future would be that his opponents should treat him and his vulgar productions with that silent contempt of which both are so justly deserving. I think that by following this course the nuisance would be (according to the phraseology of Mrs. Gamp) effectually "disposed of." Hoping that you will give this publicity, and pardon me for trespassing on your valuable space,—I remain, yours faithfully,

W. W. N. R.

THE LATE OAKS AND HIRD PUGILISTS.

(To the Editor of "The Illustrated Sporting News.")
 Sir,—It being currently reported that I, with a great many other hitherto pugilists, had been retained by Jennings, the trainer of Fille de l'Air, the winner of the Oaks, 1864, to protect the mare and jockey on the occasion of her winning, I beg to give an unqualified contradiction, inasmuch as it tends to the disparagement of the noble foreigner who is the fortunate owner of one of the best fillies a man can be the possessor of.
 The fact of the mare's winning was made no secret of, as Jennings freely told every person who sought information that Fille de l'Air was well enough to win, and he only wished she had been all right for the Two Thousand.
 Gilliam acted impromptu on the occasion of taking the mare's head and did what every Englishman aspires in doing—a good action, especially when it tends to assist a foreigner, and one of our best sportsmen; therefore, Gilliam, self, and John Howard, of Bradford, only did what became us to do.

It is equally false that the Count de Lagrange left the course immediately on the mare's winning. He stayed the racing over, and it is but a correct feeling, that as Englishmen are treated with respect at foreign races, that we reciprocally treat them as visitors.

This year will be a lesson to the racing committee to have an extra body of police to protect Mr. Stirling in his onerous duties, and a persevering jockey on winning one of our national races.—I am, sir, yours, &c.

THE HOOF OF THE HORSE.

We make the following extracts from an article entitled "Original Exposition of the Anatomical Arrangement of the Hoof of the Horse," by Professor Gamgee, sen.," which appeared in the Edinburgh Veterinary Review for May:—

"This essay may be regarded as supplementary to others, especially to two which were published in this Review in April and May, 1863. Since publishing these, I have continued my investigations, and have determined some very important anatomical characters in the construction of the hoof.

"I find that the horse's hoof is composed of and divisible into two parts, and not into three, as we have hitherto believed.

"The wall and sole are of one formation, and are not divisible by maceration, as has been stated. Nothing less than a breach of continuity, to be effected by some destructive means, can separate the sole from the wall posteriorly.

"For several years I tried, by maceration and other means, to settle the question for or against preconceived notions regarding the separation of the sole from the wall; writers having described the hoof as readily separable by maceration; the non-success in similar trials, on my own part, was regarded by myself as the result of a non-effective mode of conducting the process. At length, however, the inquiry was pushed to its final solution; and the question was solved of the frog-band or peripoli, about which Mr. Clark had laid the greatest stress, for what he called the discovery, and was extremely angry at some of his contemporaries, Continental writers especially, for not duly acknowledging his claims to contributions to veterinary science in that particular instance.

"I have now shown, what I long believed was the case, that the band of soft horn which rises above the upper margin of the wall, and gives fulness and symmetry to the foot, is an amplification of the cuticle, for that assigned purpose.

"Every anatomist knows the variety in substance, appearance, and uses, which the cuticle or scarf-skin assumes in different parts of the same animal; we have only to notice the structure as it is found in man, and compare that which covers the true skin in the arm-pit, behind the ear, and even on the back of the hand, and then look on the palms of the hands of working mechanics, or the balls of the feet of men accustomed to walk much; and in the one case we find the cuticle unappreciably thin, in the other, taking on a horn-like character and of considerable thickness.

"Turning attention to any of the lower animals, from the elephant downwards, we find the cuticle in parts, of such substance and texture as to be able to sustain much exertion, and even attrition, on the ground. All the dog and cat tribe, especially the larger and more powerful of the species, are endowed with cuticular coverings to the pads and balls of their feet, which are little inferior to the frog of the horse for power of sustaining pressure and attrition. The above instances are brought forward to show that the phenomenon of the horn-covering frog being an extension of cuticular formation, need not cause surprise to the most sceptical.

"I beg to inform the reader that the whole subject concerning horses' feet, of which the phenomena treated on in this paper form but a small part, is one which has required, and will continue to call for more constant and long-sustained labour than most men are disposed to give, or have the opportunity to devote to it; and I predict all would work rightly, if men could only be induced to see this important subject in its true light, and consider it in all its bearings; the work of advance towards sound knowledge would then be taken up by many, and would become relatively light and agreeable to all.

"I saw long since, and taught that each lateral half of the hoof posteriorly as a free motion under regulating laws, and that in action the posterior extremities on either side, with the frog in the centre in co-operation, are drawn upwards. Some degree of bending in the bottom of the foot, from a transverse line across its centre, goes on, the point of resistance being the frog in front, where the strong agglutinated union of the horn plates beneath and the wall in front afford the strength.

"The perfect state of the foot consists in the hoof being of symmetrical form which implies integrity of parts, their normal development, and consistent preservation. In such state we have the strength of the hoof and its supporting powers in greatest abundance at the front and the two columns of the heels. Whilst the frog, by spreading round from the coronet, and becoming expanded and thick over the bulbs, and increasing in density as it pushes forward over the triangular fibrous structure; which, bending round from its connections with the cartilages on each side, is attached in the centre and bottom of the coffin-bone and fascia, by which construction is given an addition of strength ineluctably potent.

"In conclusion, I beg to state that no attempt to advance true knowledge of the foot of the horse, or even to learn all that is known, except by well conducted dissections, can be expected to succeed; and nothing but the foot itself can reveal its true characters, teach us its exquisite beauties, or lead to an understanding of the causes and character of its diseases, sources of the most intense of constant suffering."

HULL RIFLE CRICKET CLUB v. FRANKY.

A match was played on Saturday the 21st between two eleven of the above clubs, which resulted in a victory for the volunteers, with one wicket to go down. Some good play was exhibited on both sides. The batting of Messrs. Thompson and Palmer was much admired. The general kindness of Mr. Hore and the good accommodation afforded by that gentleman, combined with the excellent state of the ground, and the friendly spirit of the players, contributed to make the day one of the most pleasant of the cricket season. The return match will be played shortly. Score:—

CHELTENHAM COLLEGE v. CIRENCESTER ROYAL AGRICULTURAL CLUB.

Four smoking posters took the College Eleven to Cirencester on Monday, May 23, a fact worthy of notice, as it is very seldom they have been allowed to play, except on their own ground, during the last year, until lately. Of course there was no time to finish the match, and as usual now in one day matches, it was decided by the first innings. The batting of Holt, Throby, and Higgins for Cheltenham and of Kennedy for Cirencester, was very good. May such visits be more frequent. Score:—

CRICKET AT HULL.

HULL BRITANNIA v. WELTON.
 This match was played on Monday the 23rd ult., being the fair day at this pretty little village. During the first innings the match proved to be a very equal one, but during the second the good bowling and quick fielding of the Hull Eleven so materially altered the state of the game as finally to leave the Britannia Club the winners, with eight wickets to go down. Score:—
